Catch It Dropped Dead.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)

SCOTTSVILLE. VA., Fub. 27.—The readers of The Times-Dispatch may possibly recall a little story told in this paper some months ago of a rabbit which, when run down by some dogs at the home of Mr. Moon, in Fluvanna county, was carried in the house and there, sitting upon its hind legs, was fed upon a slice of pie, and later, given a handful of persimmons.

The sequel of this story is told by Mr. Watter Moon, mail-carrier on Route No.

1. The same rabbit, after being entertained in this hospitable home for some time, was finally released to return to his native wild. One of the dogs, belonging to Mr. Moon's father, chased after the rabbit again, and, finding his efforts of no avail, came back, stood in front of his master, gazed carnestly in his face, and dropped dead.

"Revenge is sweet." Either the dog was tricked by the ple-cating rabbit in return for his persecuting, or the poor fellow died of a broken heart in his disappointment at not catching the cotton-tail. But the rabbit might have had some manners, and remembered the hospitality of the master.

The oldest man in Greene allve,

Cannot make the discovery—
When a winter was more severe.
Than stands between this and last year

A spot of earth was hard to find—
The corn mills all refused to grind—
The wheels a block of ice all round.
The ponds all frozen to the ground.
Our people could not get corn bread,
And all the fishes must be dead.

The birds would come to the barn yard and for mankind had no regard, Would light amongst the stock to eat, And almost get beneath your feet, Some being weak and poor and lame. Hunger and, cold had made them tame.

The ice is losing now its grip—
So mote it be; just let it rip—
The coming thaw we all well know
Will make the rivers overflow.
Then mud will be twelve inches deep
When travellers will all but weep.

Much sickness now prevails in Greene.
One case is Mistress Viny Deane.
Mr. Tom Collins is quite ill.

A square tower of good proportions capped by a high-peaked roof, rises from the centre, bearing in its upper stage, the town clock, recently made to order in Connecteut; while in the lower stage, well above the main roof, hangs the old bell, with ione much iniproved by its new hanging.

The new structure is fire-proof, commodicus and well arranged; and contains several strong vaults fo rkeeping county records, deeds, wills, etc. The style is a modernized Norman, massive and dignified. The plans were drawn by Baltimore architects: the contractors were Waddy and Company, of Richmond. The work was finished and handed over to the commissioners within the time named in the contract.

Clinton was formerly a sleepy village, driving its imoprance solely being the county seat and the home of a few lending families. Now it is taking on new life; its population and business are steadily growins. It is but fourteen miles by rail from the main Atlantic Const Line, and hos two trains and mails each way daily, except on Sunday, when its quiet is unbroken by the sounds of trade, travel or industry; and its people show general respect for the Lord's Day and worships. It is a dry fown, and for good order will compare favorably with others.
